

Dyslexia in the Schools:
A Free eBook for Parents and Advocates
By Dr. Kelli Sandman-Hurley
Dyslexia Training Institute

Every teacher in every classroom in every school in this country (and beyond) will come across several, if not dozens, of students who just can't seem to get the 'reading thing' down. The students are smart, articulate, and creative, yet they omit small words, read slowly, have difficulty spelling, and stumble, guess or mumble through multisyllabic words. They are placed in reading groups for extra instruction and still don't seem to 'get it.' And during his or her career, every teacher in every classroom in every school will ask themselves, "How can I help these children?" The answer is to learn as much as possible about dyslexia, because the child described above has dyslexia.
